

Popup Climate Car Demos

People have been taking part in Popup Climate Demos in their cars without knowing they were participating.

Extended traffic jams on many Motorways and Major roads have been participating in these Popup Climate Demos without even knowing.

Car drivers in some traffic jams across the region have been surprised to find out that they were indeed in demos, when projected banners appeared on overhead bridges thanking them for joining the Popup Climate Car Demos.

A 40 year old family man from Liverpool had along with some friends been projecting banners on bridges during jams and reporting them to local news outlets and social media.

I caught up with him one day last week and asked him about his initiative.

He told me he had been so frustrated with the lack of movement of traffic and investment into avoiding further disruption, and real change needed for the benefit of his young teenage children, in an ever growing polluted growth Economy, that he had had some banners made, and put them up on the bridges where traffic regularly came to a standstill in rush-hour at the M6 end of the M58.

Pleased with his work, he had then been joined by various friends some of whom had started using projection units mounted on their dashboards.

These had had the effect of startling those around them in the jam, causing them to hoot their horns in annoyance at what they presumed to be a traffic jam caused by climate activists, when in fact they were all in effect responsible for the jam!

He told me that you had to be careful that the traffic was at least moving a little or else there could be quite unpleasant road rage and incidents, although on meeting Jamie (if that is indeed his real name), I would not have wanted to ruffle his feathers, as although not having a barbed wire neck tattoo, he was quite a formidable gent.

He was, when I met him on the bridge earlier this year, in rather a hurry to reclaim his banner for another day, and whilst running off to his car shouted that he would meet me in the Jawbone pub the next week if I wanted a fuller interview.

I see now that his ideas have indeed spread and #popupclimatecardemo is indeed much prevalent on social media throughout Europe.

Strange indeed that a few can get so many to follow, and be involved in ways they never thought possible.

How many of those car drivers in these traffic jam demos of the past few months ever expected to be on a Demo, let alone in support of Climate change?
